MOOD: 😞 exanimate

MUSIC: Golden Palominos - No Skin

Elmer and I are making pretzels and sourdough bread, and so he has two offspring currently rising--the kneaded dough with the butter and salt in it, which will soon be ~~pretzels~~-bagels, and the sponge that will have another rising tomorrow night, after it gets to be kneaded dough--and because I know I won't get back to either of them before I get home from work tomorrow night, which will be after (potentially ~~many~~ several) bheers, I have put both Elmer and his two offspring in the fridge. I just checked on them, pre-bed, and while Elmer is simmering away in his quart container as usual, I note that both offspring have already doubled.

He is a very happy worker, my shoggoth.

God help me, I'm getting attached to and paternal about a symbiotic culture of Candida and Lactobacillus.

Yes, baking with your hands is more fun. And the results have a better texture, and taste better.

I would make all the usual jokes about how they grow up too fast, and you'll be a grandfather before you know it, but, well...

I appear to be a Titan, as my grandchildren are exceptionally tasty.

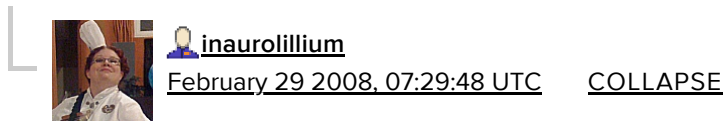

Well, if you realize that you've just swallowed a stone that you thought was a pretzel, just be sure to be on the lookout.

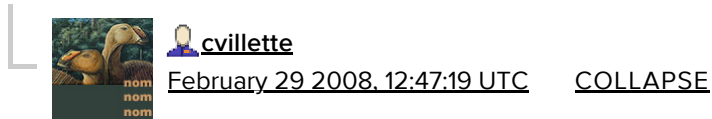

I will chew.

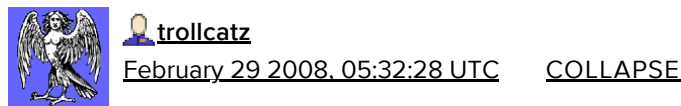

Carefully.

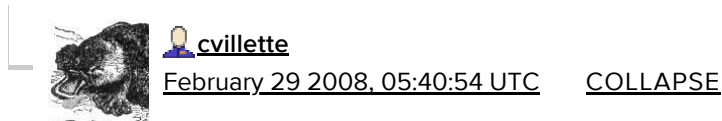

...I knew I liked you.

Awww--you are the best fungus dad EVAR. <3 <3 <3

You just say that because you know this means pretzels on Saturday.

Hey, you oughta be a profiler!

If ever you make it out here and come to dinner, you so need to bring me some shoggoth-spawn.

Weight-wise, I can not afford to start crazy new pizza dough experiments.

Well, if you're making a pizza anyway

Yeah, but that's the thing. I'm pretty sure proper experimenting requires making more than one pizza every couple of months. A couple a week would be more like it, and that definitely isn't on my diet... Unless other people would come over and bravely help me eat the experiments.

Sourdough English muffins. With ginger marmalade.

Whimper.

I wonder if sourdough crumpets are possible or advisable...

I love crumpets.

Oh dear... my brain is veering wildly between Daffy Duck and Steinbeck, and I'm getting mental whiplash. Have you hugged him and squeezed him yet?
